1.Introduction:

That instructors never cease to learn in a miscellaneous array of forms and circumstances is a true fact. They never refrain from imparting that great deal of knowledge to their learners. This work is going to step forward to a further layer of analysis. Thus, the paper's leading idea centres around foreign language teachers effectiveness, not as an isolated notion, but in relation to the student's zeal and motivation. The knowledge background of teachers and the source that it derives from impact the feedback heavily.

2. Teachers Upturn and its Heavy Impact on Learners amid the Covid-19 Pandemic

In other words, this work highlights primarily to what extent foreign language teachers upturn can influence the learning environment to which they belong.

Indeed, during the Covid-19 Pandemic phase, learners relatively lacked motivation to study and carry out research. In this case, the teacher plays a key role to know how to get back students' keenness to learn through providing tactful solutions. The solution effectiveness depends entirely on how professional the teacher can be. For instance, one of the appealing settlements may be the hybrid teaching, in other words Asynchronous Learning or Online Teaching hand in hand with the offline teaching. Hence, this latter can engender an utterly New psychological effect in Covid-19 Pandemic Era. Due to the positive vibes coming from teachers, learners can expand their research zone by carrying out researches using other sources such as books, reliable internet sources and articles.

The motivation acquired can be versatile. It can impel students to write articles, being present in many symposiums, reading books.

We must put a great deal of emphasis on the imprint that teachers may have on the learning process. The primary point is that teachers should not give much interest to Students who are incessantly interaction at the expense of those are passive. We should not be indifferent to matters such as, not understanding the notions presented in lessons teachers. Particularly in Covid-19 pandemic era, we should not overlook the fact that some students can understand the lessons relying on themes, yet others can suffer from the appropriate decoding of lessons even with the presence of teachers. Thus, it should be taken into consideration.

3. Bathing Teaching in the Covid-19 Pandemic Era in an Aura of Positivity

In fact, students' achievements may witness an improvement and upheaval. These two may owe their existence to the tactfulness of the teacher, especially in the Covid-19 Pandemic phase. In addition, the fuel of instructors should be: reading articles about the topic, attending conferences that tackle this theme of putting up with a new turning point in teaching and learning and fostering teachers' group work that may end up with positive solutions.

4. Diverse Skill Assessment

Within the scope of teaching and education, assessment and evaluation are considerably crucial in the learning process. It enables the instructors to be acquainted with the level of the learner. Adding to that, they are going to know whether the technique upon which their approach is patterned are the appropriate or not.

It is absolutely right that it has become more and more intricate in the Covid-19 Pandemic Era. The changes that have invaded the teaching methods had to be accompanied by the modifications in the way learners are assessed. In this case, assessments should incorporate diverse skill-based evaluations. "...the understanding and appropriate use of assessment practices along with the knowledge of the theoretical and philosophical underpinnings in the measurement of students' learning" (DeLuca and Klinger 2010, 419-438)

Indeed, learners are evaluated in order to echo the effectiveness of the methodology on which teaching in Covid-19 Pandemic circumstances is based. Consequently, teachers will determine whether or not they have to modify the method. "... test design and development is also a research process from beginning to end. This research is not possible without the integration of theory and practice, the careful weighing of social, ethical and societal demands, and weaving these into an effective and practical assessment tool."(Tzagari, 2020:22)

4 Conclusion

What establishes the validity of the teacher's method is the Ardour and motivation that should be mirrored by the learner. His or her achievements are heavily affected by the effectiveness of the instructors.
